To: FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION, WASHINGTON, D.C. 20463

Dear: Federal Election Committee,

While serving this great country and under the premise of the law as a physician/scientist and through my political fortitude, service obligations and in lieu of compensatory responsibilities see this and 104.5(a)quarterly report.

Financial disclosure reporting continues as required. It has been a long year with many disappointments yet with the determination of candidacy and as a presidential elect positive affirmations for this country remain unaffected.

It is my opinion this is a great country but it is not an unfaultable one. To be able to participate in the judicial system with its many compromises has been a honor. I have never compromised my integrity throughout my life. What is troubling herein is this insatiable opportunity for those who have compromised through the constitution.

Our amendments are a truism, they should be this impenetrable guide which are flawless. Yet, the banter and discussions throughout its mitigated controversy both in court and out of court is measurable. How is it those of us who follow it to the "letter" seemingly are fraught with litigation and yet more controversy? The amendments are the cornerstone of these great United States of America.

The amendments have been a guiding light in the midst of unconstitutional behavior-not by those who defend others but by those who use, for example, freedom of speech as a way to intervene and lie and challenge the constitution and what it means to many of us. Our forefathers fought for the constitution and what it means and so have I yet I have been forsaken by realism.

Who has the right to chastise the constitution? Well, in a way I guess we all have the right to give our opinion if one is allowed to express it. Our illustrious rights for freedom of speech should be a fundamental strong hold all of us can build from.

What has become of all of our rights? Who are we to challenge what it perceived to be the precipice of communication for the masses? Our precious constitution is our map and cornerstone of what this great country has to offer each and everyone of us. What has become of each and everyone of us if even one person is denied the fundamental right for constitutional representation?

As a presidential elect and I have been denied my fundamental rights in this country. How can people get together and write falsehoods about an individual and use it as a tool towards ruination?

Throughout history time and time again our forefathers have been riddled with controversy which establishes the backbone of this country. I have prevailed and fought through this chasm of time with fine individuals who represent family and ethics and morals. Through this representation the judicial system still carries the controversy and the unconstitutional mechanism which left me mesmerized at the opportunity it lends to freedom for some of us, hence this committee name Freedom Committee.

The presidential election should be the precept of which all should come together in this country, this election should also be the cornerstone of realism. I am a republican and represent the Republican Party and throughout this unconstitutional act remained in tact as a Republican and presidential elect and I am proud of it. And if it were not for a few discernible people who also believe in the constitution no one's voice would be heard at all. Certainly our Commander in Chief would have been put down from the ramifications of several acts of unkindness and the unconstitutional vehicle used for this ruse. At some point when the monetary overtones are enabled and given back its voice this instance can rest.

Complacency at these levels is jilted and quite and should not be forsaken. Some of us live day by day by way of the constitution and some of us would die for it. This makes this discernible difference between those who understand our amendments and those who do not. I should have loud resolute outrage as to what I have had to endure in regard to this indignation. As a presidential elect the actual statement of my participation is a voice in itself. When the precepts are not regarded with the same pretense as written through law then we have all lost something. I am a trustworthy individual, not a roustabout. I have the right to be disappointed at the challenge of integrity used as a way to try to sway the outcome of this path to the Whitehouse.
